Orange launches Office Number – the fixed-line number that goes where the client goes

Orange is now offering small and midsize companies its Office Number solution, bringing the fixed-line number to the mobile phone. This allows clients to call with their fixed-line number when on the road, and to be reachable at this number at fixed-line rates on the mobile phone wherever they are. Office Number substitutes the fixed-line PBX infrastructure with a mobile solution, saving clients investment and maintenance costs and bringing flexibility to their business.

Office Number is particularly suitable for small and midsize companies that have many employees out in the field. Field sales and service staff are always reachable, even when out of the office, whatever number called by their clients (fixed-line or mobile). When they leave the office they take their fixed-line number with them on the mobile phone for outbound and inbound calls alike: they no longer have to remember to forward calls to their mobile phone, and when they make a call their fixed-line number is shown.

Make calls within the user group for free, keep your phone number

Office Number supports all the critical PBX features a company relies on (call forwarding, call transfer, hunt groups and short numbers). Existing fixed-line numbers can be retained and calls between fixed-line and mobile users within the closed-user group are included. If Office Number is additionally combined with Office Flex, a desktop GSM device, only fixed-line rates are charged for calls.

In Switzerland, this innovative business solution is currently only being offered by Orange.

Office Number can be activated with any Orange Business mobile price plan. The offer also works in combination with Orange's VoIP solutions so that existing fixed-line connections (e.g. switchboard) can be retained and integrated. In addition to a one-time installation fee, the monthly fee for using Office Number for 10 lines is CHF 46.00.
